STATEMENT CONCERNING ORAL ARGUMENT

Oral argument not requested.

PROCEDURAL HISTORY

On September 14, 2017, Mr. Brooks was indicted for the offense of Aggravated Assault with a Deadly Weapon with the indictment specifying that Mr. Brooks, “did then and there intentionally or knowingly threaten Lisa Grayson, a member of the defendant’s family or household or with whom the defendant had a dating relationship, with imminent bodily injury by telling her that he was going to end her life, and the defendant did use or exhibit a deadly weapon... ” (C.R., 5).

On May 25, 2018, the State filed a Notice of Intent to Amend Indictment and remove the words “by telling her that he was going to end her life” and stated in the Notice that this language was “superfluous language that is not needed.” However, the State never actually amended the Indictment and trial proceeded on the original indictment.

On August 8, 2018, Mr. Brooks was convicted by a jury of Aggravated Assault with a Deadly Weapon. (C.R., 103).

A sentencing hearing before the Judge was set for October 4, 2018. (C.R., 111)

On October 26, 2018, a Judgment was entered which reflected a conviction for a 1st Degree Felony and a plea of True to the enhancements. The judgment also assessed a 30-year sentence in the Institutional Division of TDCJ and $279.00 in court costs. (C.R., 118).

On November 13, 2018, Mr. Brooks filed a Motion for New Trial. (C.R., 126).

On November 13, 2018, Mr. Brooks also filed a Notice of Appeal. (C.R., 130).

On November 14, 2018, the Court denied Mr. Brook’ Motion for New Trial. (C.R., 129).

On July 3, 2020, the 3rd Court of Appeals reversed the Trial Court’s order and rendered acquittal.

On September 8, 2020, the State filed a PDR.

On November 11, 2020, the Court of Criminal Appeals granted the State’s Petition for Discretionary Review.

On December 14, 2020 Respondent was notified that the State’s brief had been received. Respondent’s brief is due on January 14, 2021.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

On September 14, 2017, Mr. Brooks was indicted for the offense of Assault Impeding Breath of a Family Member and Aggravated Assault with a Deadly Weapon with the indictment specifying that Mr. Brooks, “did then and there intentionally or knowingly threaten Lisa Grayson, a member of the defendant’s family or household or with whom the defendant had a dating relationship, with imminent bodily injury by telling her that he was going to end her life, and the defendant did use or exhibit a deadly weapon... ” (C.R., 5).

Grayson could not explain what caused this attack, maintaining, in fact, that she “didn’t even talk to him” and did not “recall talking to him” before it happened. (4 R.R. 164; 190) (7 R.R. Def. Ex. 9) (10:10 or so (does not know why Appellant “tripped” but suspects jealousy because she received money from her “baby daddy”) and at 15:00 or so (saying the incident “just happened”)). She testified that she was never kicked out of Mr. Brooks’ home although her written statement and her roadside interview suggest she told police that previously. (4 R.R., 193) (7 R.R. State’s Ex. 1, Def. Ex. 9). After the incident, Ms. Grayson was pulled over and her roadside interview was recorded on an officer’s bodycam. (7 R.R. Def. Ex. 9). During this interview she never mentioned that Mr. Brooks either threatened her or that he made a non-verbal threat before attacking her. (7 R.R.

Def. Ex. 9). Over the objection of defense counsel, the jury charge did not track the elements of an assault by threat.

Mr. Brooks was acquitted of the Assault Impeding Breath of a Family Member charge but was convicted of the Aggravated Assault by threat with a Deadly Weapon. (5 R.R., 139.) Mr. Brooks went to the Judge for punishment and was sentenced to 30 years in the Institutional Division of TDCJ. (C.R. 118).

Mr. Brooks appealed on four issues, however, the State conceded Issue 4. (4 R.R. 160; 163-165). The State has only briefed Issue 1 for this PDR.

SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT

ISSUE 1: The Appellate Court properly held that the evidence proved a distinguishable discrete act from that alleged in the indictment.

The 3rd Court of Appeals held that the evidence was insufficient to convict Mr. Brooks because “there was a material variance between the indictment, which alleged the offense of assault by threat, specifically that Brooks threatened Grayson “by telling her that he was going to end her life,” and the evidence at trial. The Court of Appeals analyzed the State’s requirement to prove all elements of an offense as compared to the evidence actually presented at trial, the consequences of a jury charge that did not track with the charge alleged in the indictment, and the distinction between “nature of conduct” and “result of conduct.”

However, this is not the crux of the distinction as the Respondent has alleged that there was not any threat at all, verbal or otherwise.

ARGUMENT

a. *Standard of Review

When reviewing the sufficiency of the evidence, “evidence is considered sufficient to support a conviction when after considering all the evidence in the light most favorable to the prosecution, a reviewing court concludes that any rational trier of fact could have found the essential elements of the offense beyond a reasonable doubt.” Hernandez v. State, 556 S.W.3d 308, 315 (Tex. Crim. App. 2017); Hooper v. State, 214 S.W. 3d 9, 13 (Tex. Crim. App. 2007). When reviewing “all the evidence,” the reviewing court must look at evidence that was both properly and improperly admitted and presume that the trier of fact resolved any conflicts in favor of the prosecution and thus uphold the conviction. Conner v. State, 76 S.W.3d 192, 197 (Tex. Crim. App. 2001); Jackson v. Virginia, 443 U.S. 307, 318-19, 99 S. Ct. 2781, 61 L. Ed. 2d 560 (1979). However, even in deferring to the prosecution in this manner, a verdict cannot be sustained if the factfinder’s belief in the evidence is irrational in light of the rest of the evidence. Brooks v. State, 323 S.W.3d 893, 907 (Tex. Crim. App. 2010).

b. The Indictment

An indictment is a written statement of a grand jury accusing a person of some act or omission which, by law, is declared to be an offense. Tex. Penal Code 21.01. Everything that is necessary to be proved should be in the indictment and should be written with such certainty as will enable the accused to plead the judgment that may be given upon it in bar if any prosecution for the same offense. Id. at 21.03 and 21.04.

In the instant case, the State proceeded to trial on an indictment that alleges an offense under 22.01(a)(2) and 22.02(a)(2), a threat of bodily injury, and then at trial offered evidence solely for an offense under 22.01(a)(1) and 22.02(a)(2), assault causing bodily injury. These are two separate and distinct offenses under the statute. Had the legislature intended for them to be interchangeable then the legislature could have drafted them as such. The State claims that the threat element of 22.01(a)(2) is an “unnecessary allegation” in the current case. (State’s Petition for Discretionary Review, p. 2, ¶ 2). However, the legislature has clearly and succinctly written 22.01 and 22.02 to include offenses that are either committed by threat or committed by injury. Additionally, the State has the option to charge an individual with both an offense by threat and an offense by injury. They are not interchangeable nor are the mutually exclusive, depending on the fact pattern of each case.

This court has already held that a variance between pleading and proof “renders the evidence legally insufficient to support conviction.” Johnson v. State, 364 S.W.3d 292, 294 (Tex. Crim. App. 2012), See also, Geick v. State, 349 S.W.3d 542, 547-48 (Tex. Crim. App. 2011) (When pled, a statutory definition becomes an element of the offense that the State must prove. The statutory method of theft by deception was pled, so it must be proved); Cada v State, 334 S.W.3d 766, 776 (Tex. Crim. App. 2011) (when indictment pled retaliation against a “witness,” it was not enough to prove the alternative, unpled statutory elements of “prospective witness” and “informant.”); Curry v State, 30 S.W.3d 394, 404-05 (Tex. Crim. App. 2000) (The indictment alleged some, but not all, of the statutory alternative elements of kidnapping. A sufficiency of the evidence review was limited to the elements that had been alleged.)

This Court faced a similar set of facts in Boykin when the State proceeded to trial with an indictment that alleged the defendant had “expressly represented the substance to be a controlled substance, namely cocaine,” but the evidence at trial showed that the defendant had actually referred to the substance as “rock.” (emphasis added) Boykin v. State, 818 S.W.2d 782, 784 (Tex. Crim. App. 1991). That State argued that the use of slang for controlled substances could be used to prove an express representation. However, the legislature had provided for prosecution using slang terms under another section of the statute. To suggest that the two statutes were interchangeable would be to “presume that the Legislature intended a part of the statute to be superfluous,” which would be illogical. Id. at 786.

This Court reversed the defendant's conviction because the evidence at trial was insufficient to prove his guilt under the statute that he was prosecuted for, saying "[p]lainly, the State prosecuted the appellant under the wrong statutory provision." Id. (emphasis added). That is precisely what happened in the instant case. The State alleged an aggravated assault by threat under 22.01(a)(2), but then proved an aggravated assault under 22.01(a)(1). The State certainly had a vehicle for charging Mr. Brooks with an offense under 22.01(a)(1), but the State chose not to do so. Now, because the State failed to prove the elements of the crime they alleged, it has buyer's remorse. The State appears to argue that the "aggravated" portion of the indictment "cures" any error of including a threat in the indictment. This is disingenuous because the aggravated statute also allows for an aggravated offense by threat and an aggravated offense by injury. Using a deadly weapon does not necessarily imply a threat or the statute would not have been parsed out that carefully. This Court addressed this very issue in Olivas v. State when it ruled that causing bodily injury without a threat is a different offense than an assault by threat. Olivas v. State, 203 S.W.3d 341, 342 (Tex. Crim. App. 2006). Further, the statute parses out the ways in which involving a deadly weapon can be an offense- a person commits an aggravated offense if the person "uses OR exhibits a deadly weapon during the commission of an assault." Tex. Penal Code 22.01(a)(2) (emphasis added). The “or” stands to clarify that there are two ways to commit an aggravated offense. Based on the tenets of statutory construction, it stands to reason aggravated offense. Using a deadly weapon is not the same as exhibiting one, and vice versa. Either method can result in an aggravated offense, but they each require a different set of facts to prove the deadly weapon allegation.

c. Statutory Construction

It is one of the canons of statutory construction that plain meaning constitutes the best indicator of legislative intent to which we are bound to give effect. Boykin, at 785. Legislative intent is derived from the statute’s text, and the task of interpreting the law falls to the Judiciary. Shipp v. State, 331 S.W.3d 433, 437 (Tex. Crim. App. 2011); City of Round Rock v. Rodriguez, 399 S.W.3d 130, 133 (Tex. 2013), Tex. Const. art II, § 1.

Chapter 22 of the Texas Penal Code lists the ways in which an offender commits an assault, to wit:

(a) A person commits an offense if the person:

(1) intentionally, knowingly, or recklessly causes bodily injury to another, including the person’s spouse;

(2) intentionally or knowingly threatens another with imminent bodily injury, including the person’s spouse; OR

(3) intentionally or knowingly cause physical contact with another when the person knows or should reasonably believe that the other will regard the contact as offensive or provocative.

Tex. Pen. Code 22.01 (a) (1-3) (emphasis added).

With regard to assaultive offenses, the legislature has prescribed three ways to charge a defendant with assault; causing bodily injury, threatens imminent bodily injury, or offensive physical contact. (Tex. Pen. Code 22.01 (a) (1-3)). The “or” found after 22.01(a)(2) clearly indicates that there are three distinct ways a person can commit an offense. Based on the canons of statutory construction, it seems clear that the legislature did this for a reason.

In the instant case, the State proceeded to trial on an indictment alleging an offense under 22.01(a)(2) and 22.02(a)(2) of the Texas Penal Code in an attempt to prove that Mr. Brooks had committed an aggravated assault by making a verbal threat to the victim while using a deadly weapon. The indictment even lists the exact words Mr. Brooks was purported to have said; to wit he was “going to end her life.” (C.R. 1, p.5). However, at trial the State proceeded to offer evidence that served to prove an offense under 22.01(a)(1) and 22.02(a)(2) TPC. The State now contends that the identification of an assault by threat in the indictment is merely an “unnecessary allegation.” (State’s Petition for Discretionary Review, p. 2, ¶ 2). The State seeks an end run to prove a threat by using the aggravated statute to “backdoor”

the threat allegation, as if using a deadly weapon and exhibiting a deadly weapon are the same. Clearly this Court's prior rulings in Olivas, Landrian, and McGowan have put this issue to rest. Olivas v. State, at 342 ("We conclude that McGowan held only that assault by threat requires the defendant to communicate a threat of imminent bodily injury; stabbing someone without first threatening him is a different assaultive offense."); Landrian v. State, 268 S.W.3d 532, 540 (Tex. Crim. App. 2008) (three different courts of appeals have properly held that simple 'bodily injury assault is a separate and distinct crime from simple assault by threat. Thus aggravated assault under each distinct assaultive crime is a separate crime; aggravated assault with the underlying crime of assault by causing bodily injury and aggravated assault with the underlying crime of assault by threat.); McGowan v. State, 664 S.W.2d 355, 358 (Tex. Crim. App. 1984) ("There is no evidence that prior to the stabbing her appellant threatened her in any way. She never saw appellant holding a knife. Finally, the evidence shows that after appellant stabbed Mrs. Mack, he fled. Thus we are constrained to hold that the evidence is insufficient in Cause No. 65,965, to show aggravated assault by threats even though it shows bodily injury.")

The statute as drafted gives the State multiple ways to prosecute an assault based on the pertinent facts of each individual case, which is a great advantage to the State. However, with this advantage comes responsibility. The State must use wisdom in drafting indictments and must allege the correct violation. This Court ruled in Boykin that “[t]he state has the burden of proving each and every element of the crime beyond a reasonable doubt.” Boykin at 784. The State is well aware that it is responsible for proving all the elements charged and as such if the State alleges a crime under 22.01(a)(2), then the State had better come ready to prove those elements. In fact, the trial court judge in the instant case said so when he stated, “the State’s burden is to prove the elements of the offense as charged and that’s my ruling.” The Judge did state previously that the language “by telling her that he was going to end her life” was superfluous, but at that point the Court had no way to know that the State would not bring any evidence of a threat, verbal or otherwise. Perhaps if there was evidence of a verbal threat, but the wording varied slightly, then the specific language could be superfluous. Likewise, if the State had proven any threat, verbal or non-verbal, then the Court of Appeals may have ruled differently. However, that is not the case here. Mr. Brook’s original appellate counsel said it best in his brief to the Court of Appeals; “because there is no evidence of any threat-verbal or non-verbal- preceding the attack, the Court need not decide whether the specific words alleged in the indictment are surplusage or not, nor whether the State is allowed to establish the offense through recourse to a non-verbal threat, there is no evidence of any such threat preceding the attack.” (Petitioner’s Brief to the COA, p. 31).

d. Material Variance

Having established that assault bodily injury and assault by threat are two distinct charges, and the difference between them is not merely superfluous, we turn, in arguendo, to the material variance between verbal and non-verbal threats. The Court of Appeals properly found a material variance between what was charged in the indictment in this case and what was presented at trial. The Court focused on assault by threat as a nature of conduct offense, because it centers on the “specific criminal act alleged.” Relying on Young v. State, 341 S.W.3d 417, 424 (Tex. Crim. App. 2011), Garfas v. State, 424 S.W.3d 54, 60-61 (Tex. Crim. App. 2014), Gillette v. State, 444 S.W.3d 713, 730 (Tex. App.—Corpus Christi—Edinburg 2014 no pet.); see also, Stevenson v. State, 499 S.W.3d 842, 850 (Tex. Crim. App. 2016) (“A nature of conduct crime’s focus is the conduct and the different types of conduct are considered separate offenses.”). A verbal threat can be alleged under the statute as can a non-verbal threat, which makes each type of threat a “distinguishable discrete act.” Harris v. State, 359 S.W.3d 625, 629 (Tex. Crim. App. 2011) (quoting Ex Parte Cavazos, 203 S.W.3d 333, 336 (Tex. Crim. App. 2006)). Therefore, the State can charge a defendant with multiple offenses based on the different types of conduct displayed and the State would also have to offer evidence to prove each offense individually. Additionally, this court has already held that a variance between pleading and proof “renders the evidence legally insufficient to support conviction.”

Johnson at 294, See also, Geick at 547-48 (When pled, a statutory definition becomes an element of the offense that the State must prove. The statutory method of theft by deception was pled, so it must be proved); Cada at 766; (when indictment pled retaliation against a “witness,” it was not enough to prove the alternative, unpled statutory elements of “prospective witness” and “informant.”); Curry at 404-05 (The indictment alleged some, but not all, of the statutory alternative elements of kidnapping. A sufficiency of the evidence review was limited to the elements that had been alleged.).

An indictment must allege on its face the facts necessary (1) to show that the offense was committed, (2) to bar a subsequent prosecution for the same offense, and (3) to give the defendant notice of precisely what he is charged with.” American Plant Food Corp. v. State, 508 S.W.2d 598, 603 (Tex. Crim. App. 1974), Terry v. State, 471 S.W.2d 848, 852 (Tex. Crim. App. 1971).

The indictment in this case alleged what the State said it intended to prove, that Mr. Brooks threatened Grayson with words. However, as trial progressed the State was unable to prove what they had alleged in the indictment; to wit, an offense under 22.01(a)(2) 22.02 (a)(2) of the Texas Penal Code.

Because verbal and non-verbal threats can be alleged as different individual offenses, it follows that the evidence to prove them each respectively would also involve different and individualized evidence; ie: the spoken words that constituted the verbal threat, or the movements, behaviors, and demeanor that constituted a non-verbal threat. These variances are material because they effect the type of defense that the Defendant will prepare for trial. Santana v. State, 59 S.W.3d 187, 195 (Tex. Crim. App. 2001) (quoting Gollihar v. State, 46 S.W.3d 243, 257 (Tex. Crim. App. 2001)). But even more so in the instant case, the State did not offer any evidence of any kind of threat, be it verbal or non-verbal. The statute parses out an assault by threat as a different offense from an assault. This court has been clear about what constitutes a material variance;

“... a variance can involve the statutory language that defines the offense. This can happen when a statute specifies alternate methods by which an offense could be committed, the charging instrument pleads one of those alternate methods, but the State proves, instead, an unpled method.” Johnson at 294.

In fact, Mr. Brooks came to trial ready to defend himself against the verbal threat. Throughout the course of the trial, the State was unable to provide any evidence of the specific threat alleged in the indictment; that Mr. Brooks said he was “going to end her life.” much less that any verbal threat occurred. Indeed, the State failed to provide evidence sufficient to prove any threat at all, verbal or otherwise. The complaining witness testified that she did not have any warning that she was going to be attacked and that she could not explain what caused this attack, maintaining, in fact, that she “didn’t even talk to him” and did not “recall talking to him” before it happened. (4 R.R. 164; 190) (7 R.R. Def. Ex. 9) (10:10 or so (does not know why Appellant “tripped” but suspects jealousy because she received money from her “baby daddy”) and at 15:00 or so (saying the incident “just happened”)). As per the statute, assault by threat is achieved when a person “intentionally or knowingly threatens another with imminent bodily injury...” Tex. Pen. Code 22.01 (a) (2). Here, according to the complaining witness, there was no threat, there was an assault.

e. Variance is Moot in this Case

Even if this court finds that there is not a material variance between a verbal threat and a non-verbal threat, the facts of this case make the distinction a moot point because the State’s complaining witness never testified to any threat. Material variance or not, the State still had to prove an assault by threat, either verbal or non-verbal because that is what they charged Mr. Brooks with. There is no testimony that Mr. Brooks brandished the wood, no testimony that Ms. Grayson saw him holding it and was in fear, no testimony that he held the wood up and said he was going to hit her with it. The testimony was devoid of any facts to support the indictment for assault by threat.

The State, in essence, contends that because the charging instrument charges Mr. Brooks with some kind of assault it is immaterial that the indictment doesn’t allege the statutorily correct method of assault. This argument amounts to that old idiom, “well it’s close enough for government work.” This alludes to the notion that work for the government is not done with care or pride.” McGraw Hill Dictionary of American Idioms and Phrasal Verbs, 2002 (online). This is unacceptable. The State has complete control of what it alleges in an indictment as well as largely unlimited resources. The legislature has provided a set of statutes that define prosecutable offenses and the elements of each and every offense. There is nothing that hinders the prosecution from properly setting forth the appropriate charge and the elements needed to prove that charge in an indictment. To suggest that a defendant must guess at what the State meant to allege instead of what they did allege is a perversion of our system of justice. From a public policy standpoint, this would be financially devastating to the criminal defense system. Consider the court appointed attorney who would have to prepare for all possible iterations of a crime under a particular statute simply to protect a client at trial. Defense counsel in the present case could have potentially had to prepare for the defense of at least 3 offenses; 1) 22.01(a)(1), 2) 22.01(a)(2), 3) 22.01(a)(3), with the further addition of an aggravated element to each of them. Trials will last longer, counties will have to pay more for indigent defense, and dockets will overflow. However, the State suffers little burden by being held to the standards that the legislature has outlined with regard to indictments. This is what they are already supposed to be doing with each and every indictment.

f. Sufficient Notice

The Court of Appeals properly found that the indictment failed to give Brooks sufficient notice of the charges that he would have to defend against at trial. In support of this, the Court enumerated the many ways in which Mr. Brooks' counsel centered his defense around the verbal threat alleged in the indictment, including the following;

“In opening statement he characterized the interaction between Brooks and Grayson as him kicking her out of the house and getting an angry response, casting doubt on whether Brooks made any threat. His cross-examination of the State's witnesses, including Grayson emphasized the lack of a verbal threat. During the charge conference, counsel argued that the jury charge needed to include instructions about the indicted verbal threat. He further argued that the charge should direct the jury to acquit because ‘[t]here have been zero statements with regard to a threat’ in evidence. Counsel also moved for a directed verdict on the same basis. Finally, he argued to the jury that “words mean things” and that proof of causing bodily injury to Grayson did not constitute proof of a threat because the words ‘cause injury’ and ‘threaten’ are different.” (COA Opinion p. 12-13).

It is clear from the record that Brooks' defense counsel defended against exactly what the indictment alleged. However, if the indictment had alleged a non-verbal threat, or a bodily injury offense without threat, defense counsel could have prepared and presented a different defense to respond to that allegation. It would be patently unfair for the State to be allowed to proceed at trial and prove a different crime entirely from that alleged in the indictment. The State has sole control over which crimes it alleges and presents to the Grand Jury and the State proceeded on an indictment that specifically set forth a threat as the offense being charged. The notion that Defendants and defense counsel should now be expected to guess as to what other crimes the State might pursue once trial begins is anathema to the very concept of sufficient notice.

g. Factual Insufficiency

When reviewing factual sufficiency, the reviewing court considers all the evidence in the light most favorable to the prosecution and determines if a rational trier of fact could have found all the essential elements of an offense beyond a reasonable doubt. Hernandez at 315.

The United States Supreme Court noted that a reversal based on insufficiency of the evidence has the same effect as a jury acquittal "because it means that no rational fact finder could have voted to convict the defendant" and that "the prosecution has failed to produce sufficient evidence to prove its case.” State v. Tibbs, 457 US 31, 41, 102 S. Ct. 2211.

In the instant case the record reflects that no verbal threats were ever made. The State relies on the notion that threats can be verbal or non-verbal, which is not in dispute. However, the record in this case does not support a finding of a non-verbal threat either. Instead, it reflects a lack of non-verbal threats as well. Grayson herself stated that she “didn’t even talk to him” and did not “recall talking to him” before it happened. (Appellant’s Brief to COA, p. 18-19), (R.R. Vol 4, 164; 190), (R.R. Vol. 7, Def. Ex. 9). She also did not report any threat when speaking with law enforcement later on the night of the incident. (R.R. Vol. 7, Def. Ex. 9). Grayson described the attack as occurring without any preamble saying several times that Mr. Brooks just jumped on her. (R.R. Vol. 4, p. 174; 186-187; 205 ((R.R. Vol. 7, Def. ex. 9) (e.g., beg. at 3:03 approx. and 7:13 approx.)). Nowhere in the record is there evidence that Brooks threatened her with the piece of wood.

The State seeks to rely on the fact that defense counsel repeatedly referred to a threat and did not use the words “verbal threat”; “defendant’s counsel made no argument that the threat was only non-verbal during closing arguments.” This is patently disingenuous because it is the State that charged him by indictment with particularity; the State put a verbal threat in the indictment. Of course, defense counsel didn’t parse out the type of threat, the only kind of threat that was relevant in this case was a verbal threat, because that is what was directly quoted within the indictment. Perhaps if the indictment only said “assault by threat” the State might have a point. Except for the pesky fact that the evidence didn’t show a threat of any kind, verbal or non-verbal. However, the State, chose to enunciate a particularized threat, a verbal one with specific words. Sometimes less is more, but if the State puts more in the indictment then the State has to prove more; especially if the “more” constitutes a separate and discrete act that can be charged as such. Defense counsel was entitled to take the State at its word that they were all talking about a verbal threat. He did not need to repeat the word “verbal” over and over to validate the State’s burden. However, and it bears repeating again, the State did not provide evidence of any threat and it was required to do so in a trial for assault by threat, it’s literally in the name of the offense, so this merry-go-round ride must stop here.

h. Jury Charge

An assault by threat necessarily includes the existence of a threat. The hypothetically correct jury charge is one that reflects the essential elements of the offense for the case at bar. Hernandez at 315, Johnson at 294, (“A hypothetically correct jury charge reflects the governing law, the indictment, the State’s burden of proof and theories of liability, and an adequate description of the offense for the particular case.”) Id. (emphasis added). It includes the statutory elements of the offense as modified by the indictment. Material variances between the indictment and the State's proof at trial will affect a hypothetically correct jury charge. Hernandez, at 312.

The jury charge in this case should have tracked the essential elements of an assault by threat. Unfortunately, it did not. During the charge conference, Brooks' defense counsel argued for a jury charge that included the necessary language of assault by threat in order to track with the indictment. However, the jury charge was not amended to include the elements of an assault by threat. This put Brooks at a significant disadvantage because he was not on notice as to the offense that the State was going to attempt to prove at trial, nor was the jury given the jury charge that tracked the elements of the crime he was charged with. The Court of Appeals correctly found that this "prejudiced Brooks' substantial rights and resulted in insufficient evidence to support his conviction.

APPENDIX

TEXAS COURT OF APPEALS, THIRD DISTRICT, AT AUSTIN

NO. 03-18-00759-CR

Jessie Lee Brooks, Jr., Appellant

v.

The State of Texas, Appellee

---

FROM THE 20TH DISTRICT COURT OF MILAM COUNTY
NO. CR25,688, THE HONORABLE JOHN YOUNGBLOOD, JUDGE PRESIDING

Jessie Lee Brooks Jr. was convicted by a jury of aggravated assault with a deadly weapon. See Tex. Penal Code § 22.02(a)(2). The indictment alleged that Brooks threatened Lisa Grayson, his girlfriend, with imminent bodily injury “by telling her that he was going to end her life” while using or exhibiting a deadly weapon, to wit: a piece of wood. See id. §§ 22.01(a)(2), 22.02(a)(2). Arising out of the same set of facts, the State also indicted Brooks for family violence assault by impeding Grayson’s breath or circulation, see id. § 22.01(a)(2), and the jury found him not guilty of that offense. The trial court entered judgment on the jury’s verdict, assessing punishment at 30 years’ confinement and requiring Brooks to pay several court costs and fees.

In four issues, Brooks contends that (1) the evidence was insufficient to support the jury’s finding that he threatened Grayson, (2) the costs or fees are facially unconstitutional as violations of the separation of powers, (3) we should modify the trial court’s Order to Withdraw Funds from his Inmate Trust Account, and (4) we should modify the judgment to correct two clerical errors.

We reverse Brooks's conviction for aggravated assault and render a judgment of acquittal because there was a material variance between the indictment, which alleged that Brooks threatened Grayson "by telling her that he was going to end her life," and the evidence at trial, which showed a non-verbal threat of displaying a piece of wood, that resulted in insufficient evidence to support his conviction, and because the variance prejudiced his substantial rights.

BACKGROUND

Grayson lived with Brooks, her boyfriend, in Cameron, Texas. According to Grayson, as she was leaving for work one morning, Brooks attacked her. She believed that it started with Brooks feeling jealous over her receiving money from her child's father, so he "jumped on" her, as he had done several times before, and beat her. She testified that when she went to her car that morning, he beat her with "a two-by-four" wooden board that he retrieved from the house. As he "beat [her] with a board," she tried to protect herself with her arms, and he kept hitting her. She testified: he "hit[] me to the point it knocked my tooth—yes—I mean, my tooth came out, the partial on my tooth." And further: "When I fell and like hit—like grabbed both of his hands and he like literally choked me real hard." During her testimony, she said that she "didn't even talk to Brooks that morning" of the assault.

She also described prior assaults where Brooks "jumped" on her and beat her, including a prior assault over her children where he "grabbed me by my neck and slammed me to the—to the passenger door. And then he like jumped me, and then—and then he like threatened me and just like—and he like jumped on me and cussing me and cussing me.”

Grayson also testified that, after the assault that was the subject of this prosecution, she had bruises all over her body and her fingers “were busted.” She sought treatment for her injuries at a Rockdale emergency room 15–20 minutes away, in order to hide from Brooks. She told the ER physician “that she was hit by her boyfriend with a two-by-four about the right arm, right forearm, [and] right hand.” She also told the physician that she “had been choked the day before for about a minute,” “had some chest-wall pain from some trauma,” and “was hit the day before.”

That night, Brooks reported to the Cameron police that Grayson had returned to his house, broke the house’s windows, and went back to Rockdale. Officer James Sherer, of the Cameron Police Department, and a fellow officer offered to issue Grayson a trespass warning not to return to the house. Brooks agreed, so the officers contacted law enforcement in Rockdale to find her.

Law enforcement found Grayson in Rockdale during a traffic stop. She told Officer Sherer, who arrived later, that Brooks “struck [her] with a wooden board” and that she had not broken the windows out of the house. In addition, she told other officers at the traffic stop about being hit with the board. Several officers noticed bruising on her arm and hand, which she attributed to Brooks’s attack with the board.

Grayson also told Officer Sherer that during her several-month relationship with Brooks she went to a hospital once in Temple, where, “they had to, like, bring me back to life” because Brooks had “choked the s— out of” her. She expressed that Brooks had a history of telling her that he would stop hitting her, and she believed him, but the abuse continued.

After the traffic stop ended, Grayson went to a Cameron police station and provided a voluntary handwritten statement, which was admitted into evidence at trial. She described the attack:

The night went to car to get a Advil so Jessie lock me out the house I was tryin to come get back in house. he grad my neck start choching me so hard I couldn't Breath the he grad A Board start hitting me with it so hard I told Jessie that he was hurting me so he told me I need to Hit. So he kept Hittin me with the Board the After tha he start hittin my fingurs till they Stard Bleeding Officer Clayton Domel of the Cameron Police Department reviewed the statement and later interviewed Grayson. She told him that there was an argument with Brooks during which Brooks "began to choke her." She said that she did not lose consciousness but "that she couldn't breathe and told him to stop." According to Officer Domel's description of Grayson's account, "at that point, [Brooks] quit choking her[,] and that's when he grabbed a piece of board, the two-by-four[,] from what she described[,] and began to strike her with it."

The State charged Brooks with two counts of assault in two separate indictments filed in two separate cause numbers. One charged him with intentionally or knowingly causing bodily injury to Grayson "by impeding the normal breathing or circulation of the blood . . . by applying pressure with hands to [her] throat and neck." The other charged him with intentionally or knowingly threatening her with imminent bodily injury "by telling her that he was going to end her life, and [he] did use or exhibit a deadly weapon during the commission of the assault, to wit: a piece of wood."

The cases proceeded to trial. A jury was empaneled; the State read both indictments to the jury verbatim; and Brooks pleaded not guilty to both offenses. The following day, before opening statements, the court addressed an issue "with regard to an amendment of the indictment.” The record reflects that about two and a half months before trial, the State filed a Notice of Intention to Amend the Indictment, in which it sought to amend the assault-by-threat indictment by, among other things, deleting the phrase “by telling her that he was going to end her life.” The parties disputed whether the indictment had been amended by the notice, which had not been acted upon by the court. Ultimately, the trial court explained that trial would proceed on the original indictment as presented to the jury, implicitly denying the State’s request to amend the indictment. While the judge seemed to agree with the State’s argument that the phrase that it sought to delete was superfluous—remarking, “Well, I—frankly, I don’t understand why it’s in there but I think it’s superfluous”—he stated that “the State’s burden is to prove the elements of the offense as charged and that’s my ruling.”

The jury charge for aggravated assault by threat contained no instructions relating to the verbal threat contained in the indictment. In the abstract portion of the charge, the court defined “intentionally threaten another with imminent bodily injury” and “knowingly threaten another with imminent bodily injury” without reference to whether the threatening conduct was verbal or non-verbal. And, over Brooks’s objection, the application paragraphs omitted the phrase “by telling her that he was going to end her life.”<sup>1</sup> The court simply instructed the jury to find Brooks guilty if the State had proved beyond a reasonable doubt the three elements that

1. the defendant . . . threatened imminent bodily injury to [Grayson];
2. the defendant did this –
  - a. intentionally; or
  - b. knowingly; and

<sup>1</sup> In response to Brooks’s objection that the phrase was “descriptive of the threat” and should be in the jury charge because it had been read to the jury, the trial court said, “And as I was saying, I find that language to be superfluous. The State is required to prove up the elements of the offense charged, and so I will overrule the objection at this time.”

3. the defendant, during the alleged assault, used or exhibited a deadly weapon, to wit: a piece of wood.

The jury acquitted Brooks of family violence assault by strangulation but found him guilty of aggravated assault by threat. This appeal followed.

DISCUSSION

I. Material Variance Between Indictment's Allegation of Verbal Threat and Lack of Proof at Trial of Any Verbal Threat

In his first issue, Brooks contends that the evidence was insufficient because the State failed to prove the “threatens” element of assault as it was charged in the indictment. See Tex. Penal Code §§ 22.01(a)(2), 22.02(a).

A. Applicable law and standard of review

A person commits aggravated assault if the person “commits assault as defined in Sec. 22.01 and the person: . . . uses or exhibits a deadly weapon during the commission of the assault.” Id. § 22.02(a)(2). A person commits assault if the person “intentionally or knowingly threatens another with imminent bodily injury.” Id. § 22.01(a)(2). “Assault by threat requires only fear of imminent bodily injury and does not require a finding of actual bodily injury.” Dolkart v. State, 197 S.W.3d 887, 893 (Tex. App.—Dallas 2006, pet. ref’d). The offense “is conduct-oriented, focusing upon the act of making a threat, regardless of any result that threat might cause.” Landrian v. State, 268 S.W.3d 532, 536 (Tex. Crim. App. 2008). It is thus a “nature of conduct” offense, not a “result of conduct” offense. See id.; see also id. at 543 (Price, J., concurring) (“[T]here are the ‘bodily injury’ and ‘physical contact’ theories of simple assault, which are result-of-conduct theories of the offense, and then there is the ‘threat-of-imminent-bodily injury’ theory, which is a nature-of-conduct theory of the offense.”).

A threat need not be verbal; a person may communicate a threat by action or conduct. McGowan v. State, 664 S.W.2d 355, 347 (Tex. Crim. App. 1984); Donoho v. State, 39 S.W.3d 324, 329 (Tex. App.—Fort Worth 2001, pet. ref’d). The “display of a deadly weapon of and within itself constitutes a threat of the required imminent harm.” Robinson v. State, 596 S.W.2d 130, 133 n.7 (Tex. Crim. App. 1980); Mitchell v. State, 546 S.W.3d 780, 787 (Tex. App.—Houston [1st Dist.] 2018, no pet.).

When reviewing the sufficiency of the evidence, “evidence is considered sufficient to support a conviction when, after considering all of the evidence in the light most favorable to the prosecution, a reviewing court concludes that any rational trier of fact could have found the essential elements of the offense beyond a reasonable doubt.” Hernandez v. State, 556 S.W.3d 308, 315 (Tex. Crim. App. 2017).<sup>2</sup> The “essential elements of the offense” are “the elements of the offense as defined by the hypothetically correct jury charge for the case.” Id. at 315 (quoting Johnson v. State, 364 S.W.3d 292, 294 (Tex. Crim. App. 2012)). “[A] hypothetically correct jury charge reflects the governing law, the indictment, the State’s burden of proof and theories of liability, and an adequate description of the offense for the particular case.” Id. It includes the statutory elements of the offense as modified by the indictment. See id. at 312–13; Johnson, 364 S.W.3d at 294.

There are sometimes “variances between allegations in the indictment and the State’s proof at trial.” Hernandez, 556 S.W.3d at 312. “[O]nly material variances will affect the hypothetically correct jury charge.” Id. “[A]llegations that give rise to immaterial variances” need not be “incorporate[d]” into the hypothetically correct jury charge for the case. Johnson, 364 S.W.3d at 294.

<sup>2</sup> All citations to Hernandez are to the Court’s opinion on original submission, which the Court affirmed on rehearing. See Hernandez v. State, 556 S.W.3d 308, 331 (Tex. Crim. App. 2018) (op. on reh’g) (“We affirm our original opinion reversing the judgment of the court of appeals, and we reject Hernandez’s arguments on rehearing for the reasons stated herein.”).

Two types of variances can be material. See Hernandez, 556 S.W.3d at 313–14; Johnson, 364 S.W.3d at 294–95. “The first type of variance occurs when the State’s proof deviates from the statutory theory of the offense as alleged in the indictment; the State may not plead one specific statutory theory but then prove another.” Hernandez, 556 S.W.3d at 313 (citing Johnson, 364 S.W.3d at 294). This type of variance is always material. Id. The second type of variance is a “non-statutory allegation that is descriptive of the offense in some way.” Id. at 313–14 (citing Johnson, 364 S.W.3d at 294). Whether this type is material “depend[s] upon whether it would result in conviction for a different offense than what the State alleged.” Id. at 314. If the variance “converts the offense proven at trial into a different offense than what was pled in the charging instrument,” then it is material. Id. at 316.

The key to identifying different offenses is pinpointing the “allowable unit of prosecution” for each offense. See id.; Johnson, 364 S.W.3d at 295–96. A statute’s allowable unit of prosecution is the “distinguishable discrete act that is a separate violation of the statute.” Harris v. State, 359 S.W.3d 625, 629 (Tex. Crim. App. 2011) (quoting Ex parte Cavazos, 203 S.W.3d 333, 336 (Tex. Crim. App. 2006)). “Absent an explicit statement that ‘the allowable unit of prosecution shall be such-and-such,’ the best indicator of legislative intent regarding the unit of prosecution is the gravamen or focus of the offense.” Id. at 630 (quoting Jones v. State, 323 S.W.3d 885, 889 (Tex. Crim. App. 2010)).

Because the assault statute establishes separate and distinct assaultive crimes, “[t]he gravamen of the offense of aggravated assault is the specific type of assault defined in Section 22.01.” See Landrian, 268 S.W.3d at 536–37. Aggravated assault with the underlying crime of assault causing bodily injury is a “result of conduct” offense; aggravated assault with the underlying crime of assault by threat is a “nature of conduct” offense. Id. at 540. For “nature of conduct” offenses, “different types of conduct are considered to be separate offenses.” Gonzales v. State, 304 S.W.3d 838, 848 (Tex. Crim. App. 2010). The focus is on “the specific criminal act.” See Young v. State, 341 S.W.3d 417, 424 (Tex. Crim. App. 2011). By contrast, because assault by causing bodily injury is result-oriented, “[h]ow that serious bodily injury was caused does not ‘help define the allowable unit of prosecution for this type of aggravated assault offense, so’” a variance relating to how the actor caused the assault injury “cannot be material.” See Hernandez, 556 S.W.3d at 314 (citing Johnson, 364 S.W.3d at 296–98); cf. Johnson, 364 S.W.3d at 298 (“‘Stabbing with a knife’ and ‘bludgeoning with a baseball bat’ are two possible ways of murdering Dangerous Dan, but they do not constitute separate offenses. These methods of committing murder do describe an element of the offense: the element of causation. But murder is a result-of-conduct crime. What caused the victim’s death is not the focus or gravamen of the offense; the focus or gravamen is that the victim was killed. Variances such as this can never be material because such a variance can never show an ‘entirely different offense’ than what was alleged.”).

In addition to materiality, reversal of a conviction for a variance depends on whether the variance prejudices the defendant’s “substantial rights.” Santana v. State, 59 S.W.3d 187, 195 (Tex. Crim. App. 2001) (quoting Gollihar v. State, 46 S.W.3d 243, 257 (Tex. Crim. App. 2001)). Prejudice to the defendant’s substantial rights turns on “whether the indictment, as written, informed the defendant of the charge against him sufficiently to allow him to prepare an adequate defense at trial, and whether prosecution under the deficiently drafted indictment would subject the defendant to the risk of being prosecuted later for the same crime.” Id. (quoting Gollihar, 46 S.W.3d at 257). “[A] conviction that contains a material variance that fails to give the defendant sufficient notice or would not bar a second prosecution for the same [offense] requires reversal, even when the evidence is otherwise legally sufficient to support the conviction.” Byrd v. State, 336 S.W.3d 242, 248 (Tex. Crim. App. 2011).

B. “Nature of conduct” of a verbal threat differs materially from “nature of conduct” of a non-verbal threat

With these principles in mind, we turn to Brooks’s arguments under his first issue. He points out that the indictment charged him with threatening Grayson “by telling her that he was going to end her life, and [he] did use or exhibit a deadly weapon during the commission of the assault, to wit: a piece of wood.” He concedes that the State need not have proven the exact words of the verbal threat in the indictment, but he argues that it had to prove “a verbal threat” of some kind, instead of only non-verbal threats. He says that “assault (and thus aggravated assault) by threat is a ‘conduct-oriented offense’, . . . meaning that [he] could be charged with as many instances of aggravated assault by threat as there were types of threats made.”

We agree. Assault by threat, because it is a “nature of conduct” offense, centers on the specific criminal act alleged. See Young, 341 S.W.3d at 424; Garfias v. State, 424 S.W.3d 54, 60–61 (Tex. Crim. App. 2014); Gillette v. State, 444 S.W.3d 713, 730 (Tex. App—Corpus Christi—Edinburg 2014, no pet.); see also Stevenson v. State, 499 S.W.3d 842, 850 (Tex. Crim. App. 2016) (“A nature-of-conduct crime’s focus is the conduct and the different types of conduct are considered separate offenses.”). Therefore if Brooks threatened Grayson by displaying the piece of wood and saying nothing, that “of and within itself constitutes a threat of the required imminent harm.” See Robinson, 596 S.W.2d at 133 n.7; Mitchell, 546 S.W.3d at 787. Such a non-verbal threat—an act different from a verbal threat to end Grayson’s life—would constitute a “distinguishable discrete act” that would separately violate the assault statute. See Harris, 359 S.W.3d at 629 (quoting Ex parte Cavazos, 203 S.W.3d at 336). In other words, a verbal threat would be “a different offense” from a non-verbal one—each act is a separate and distinct act of threatening. See Hernandez, 556 S.W.3d at 316. Although the verbal or non-verbal character of a threat “is not an element of the offense” proscribed by the assault statute, it is “a non-statutory description of the statutory, gravamen element of” the threatening conduct. See Johnson, 364 S.W.3d at 297–98 (citing Byrd, 336 S.W.3d at 251–52).

The hypothetically correct jury charge for Brooks’s case, because of the indictment’s allegation of threatening Grayson “by telling her that he was going to end her life,” requires proof of a verbal threat. See Hernandez, 556 S.W.3d at 312–13; Johnson, 364 S.W.3d at 294. The only evidence suggestive of a verbal threat in this case was Grayson’s written statement for the police.<sup>3</sup> In it, she wrote that, during the assault, Brooks “told me I need to [h]it.” She never described any other statement that Brooks allegedly made, and the State offered no evidence of any other alleged verbal threat. We conclude that no rational juror could discern a threat in the statement here, “he told me I need to [h]it.”

The variance between the verbal threat alleged in the indictment and the proof at trial of a non-verbal threat of displaying a piece of wood constitutes a non-statutory, material variance. See Hernandez, 556 S.W.3d at 313–14; Johnson, 364 S.W.3d at 294–96. Thus, there was insufficient evidence to support the required finding of the verbal threat alleged. See Hernandez, 556 S.W.3d at 315; see also Byrd, 336 S.W.3d at 247 (“A variance of this type is actually a failure of proof because the indictment sets out one distinct offense, but the proof shows an entirely different offense.”).

<sup>3</sup> Grayson testified about another instance when Brooks threatened her—she even used the word “threatened” in her testimony—but her testimony made clear that she was referring to an occasion before the one charged in the indictment.

The State counters that the variance here is immaterial, like the ones in Johnson and Marinos v. State, 186 S.W.3d 167 (Tex. App.—Austin 2006, pet. ref’d). But in Johnson, the offense at issue was assault by causing bodily injury, not assault by threat. See 364 S.W.3d at 298. For assault by causing bodily injury, “[w]hat caused the victim’s injury is not the focus or gravamen of th[e] offense.” Id. Because that type of assault is a “result of conduct” offense, its gravamen is “the victim and the bodily injury that was inflicted.” Id. Here, we have a different offense—the “nature of conduct” offense of assault by threat. See Landrian, 268 S.W.3d at 536; id. at 543 (Price, J., concurring). And in Marinos, this Court recognized that the indictment contained no allegation of a verbal threat: “Neither the indictment nor the charge required a finding that appellant verbally threatened the complainant, although there is ample evidence that he did so.” 186 S.W.3d at 176 n.4. The opposite is true here. First, Brooks’s indictment did contain an allegation of a verbal threat and thus required proof of a verbal threat. Second, no evidence demonstrated a verbal threat.

Having concluded that a material variance exists, we next must determine whether the variance between the indictment’s allegation of a verbal threat and the evidence of a non-verbal one prejudiced Brooks’s substantial rights. It did so if it did not give him sufficient notice of the charge against him and would subject him to further prosecution for this assault against Grayson. See Byrd, 336 S.W.3d at 248; Santana, 59 S.W.3d at 195.

As for notice, we conclude that the indictment failed to give Brooks sufficient notice of any charge against him of a non-verbal threat. In response to the indictment, Brooks presented a defense centered around the absence of a verbal threat. In opening statement, he characterized the interaction between Brooks and Grayson as him kicking her out of the house and her getting angry in response, casting doubt about whether Brooks made any threat. His cross-examination of the State's witnesses, including Grayson, emphasized the lack of a verbal threat. During the charge conference, counsel argued that the jury charge needed to include instructions about the indicted verbal threat. He further argued that the charge should direct the jury to acquit because "[t]here have been zero statements with regard to a threat" in evidence. Counsel also moved for a directed verdict on the same basis. Finally, he argued to the jury that "words mean things" and that proof of causing bodily injury to Grayson did not constitute proof of a threat because the words "cause injury" and "threaten" are different.

Furthermore, the kind of threat alleged—a verbal threat—differed from a non-verbal threat. The record reflects that Brooks defended against the lack of any verbal threat. We conclude that the notice factor points to prejudice to Brooks's substantial rights. See Byrd, 336 S.W.3d at 248; Santana, 59 S.W.3d at 195.

Under the second factor, the indictment for a verbal threat leaves open the possibility of a future indictment for a non-verbal one. The two, as we have concluded, constitute different assault-by-threat offenses. See Hernandez, 556 S.W.3d at 314. Thus, this factor points to prejudice to Brooks's substantial rights even if "the evidence [wa]s otherwise legally sufficient to support the conviction" for an assault by a non-verbal threat. See Byrd, 336 S.W.3d at 248.

For all these reasons, we hold that the variance between the indictment allegation of Brooks's threat "by telling [Grayson] that he was going to end her life" and the evidence at trial of a non-verbal threat of displaying a piece of wood was a material variance that prejudiced Brooks's substantial rights and resulted in insufficient evidence to support his conviction.

See Hernandez, 556 S.W.3d at 315–16. We thus sustain Brooks’s first issue and reverse his conviction for aggravated assault.

II. No Potential Lesser Included Offense Necessarily Found by the Jury

Because we hold the evidence insufficient to support Brooks’s conviction for aggravated assault by threat as it was charged here, we must “decid[e] whether to reform the judgment to reflect a conviction for a lesser-included offense” before we may render a judgment of acquittal. Thornton v. State, 425 S.W.3d 289, 299–300 (Tex. Crim. App. 2014).

Our “authority to reform a judgment of conviction is limited to lesser-included offenses of the offense of conviction.” Lang v. State, 586 S.W.3d 125, 130 (Tex. App.—Austin 2019, pet. granted). A “necessar[y] part of the analysis” is “whether the offense for which a reformed judgment of conviction is sought is a lesser-included offense of the convicted offense.” Id. at 130 n.2. This is so because neither this Court nor the trial court has “jurisdiction to convict a defendant of an offense not charged in the charging instrument unless that offense is a lesser-included offense of the crime charged.” See id. (emphasis added). To identify potential lesser included offenses, “[w]e do not consider the evidence that was presented at trial; rather, we consider only the statutory elements of aggravated assault with a deadly weapon as they were modified by the particular allegations in the indictment.” Rice v. State, 333 S.W.3d 140, 145 (Tex. Crim. App. 2011).

Brooks identifies three potential lesser included offenses: attempted aggravated assault by threat with a deadly weapon, misdemeanor deadly conduct, and simple assault by threat. We have found no other potential lesser included offenses applicable to “the statutory elements of aggravated assault with a deadly weapon as they were modified by the particular allegations in the indictment” here. See id.

In analyzing judgment reformation, we must answer two questions: 1) in the course of convicting the appellant of the greater offense, must the jury have necessarily found every element necessary to convict the appellant for the lesser-included offense; and 2) conducting an evidentiary sufficiency analysis as though the appellant had been convicted of the lesser-included offense at trial, is there sufficient evidence to support a conviction for that offense?

Thornton, 425 S.W.3d at 300. If we answer either of these “no,” we are “not authorized to reform the judgment” to reflect a conviction for the lesser included offense. Id. “But if the answers to both are yes, [we are] authorized—indeed required—to avoid the ‘unjust’ result of an outright acquittal.” Id.

To reform to the lesser included offense of attempted aggravated assault by threat, the evidence must show that Brooks, “with specific intent to commit” aggravated assault by threat with a deadly weapon, “d[id] an act amounting to more than mere preparation that tend[ed] but fail[ed] to effect the commission of” that offense. See Tex. Penal Code § 15.01(a). “[T]o be guilty of criminal attempt, it is not necessary that the accused commit every act short of actual commission of the intended offense.” Come v. State, 82 S.W.3d 486, 489 (Tex. App.—Austin 2002, no pet.). “There is necessarily a gray area between conduct that is clearly no more than mere preparation and conduct that constitutes the last proximate act prior to actual commission of the offense.” Id. “Whether conduct falling in that gray area amounts to more than mere preparation must be determined on a case-by-case basis.” Id. No evidence shows conduct by Brooks that tended but failed to effect a verbal threat against Grayson beyond merely preparing to make a verbal threat. The only evidence of a verbal statement by Brooks was Grayson’s written statement that Brooks “told [her] I need to [h]it.” We cannot discern from this statement any step beyond mere preparation toward verbally threatening her. No other testimony or exhibit suggests a step toward a verbal threat on the occasion in question. We thus conclude that the evidence is insufficient to support reformation to the lesser included offense of attempted aggravated assault by threat with a deadly weapon.

As for misdemeanor deadly conduct, that offense requires evidence that Brooks recklessly engaged in conduct that placed Grayson in imminent danger of serious bodily injury. See Tex. Penal Code § 22.05(a); Dixon v. State, 358 S.W.3d 250, 256–57 (Tex. App.—Houston [1st Dist.] 2011, pet. ref’d). When an indictment alleges that the defendant intentionally or knowingly threatened to cause imminent bodily injury while using or exhibiting a deadly weapon, deadly conduct is established by proof of the same or less than all the facts needed to establish aggravated assault. See Guzman v. State, 188 S.W.3d 185, 190 n.9 (Tex. Crim. App. 2006); Dixon, 358 S.W.3d at 256–57.

We are bound by the indictment’s allegations when determining whether misdemeanor deadly conduct is a potential lesser included offense. See Rice, 333 S.W.3d at 145 (“We do not consider the evidence that was presented at trial; rather, we consider only the statutory elements of aggravated assault with a deadly weapon as they were modified by the particular allegations in the indictment.”); Lang, 586 S.W.3d at 130 n.2 (concluding that this Court has no “jurisdiction to convict a defendant of an offense not charged in the charging instrument unless that offense is a lesser-included offense of the crime charged” (emphasis added)). The indictment here alleged a verbal threat.

Accordingly, we must answer (1) whether, in convicting Brooks for aggravated assault by threat and with a deadly weapon, the jury must have necessarily found every element necessary to convict him of misdemeanor deadly conduct and (2) whether sufficient evidence supports the necessary findings. See Thornton, 425 S.W.3d at 300. We answer “no” to the second question because only a verbal threat was charged. And as we concluded above, no rational juror could have found a verbal threat from the evidence. Thus, because there is insufficient evidence of the kind of threat charged, no evidence establishes the required combination of a threat plus the use or exhibition of a deadly weapon that would establish misdemeanor deadly conduct’s elements. See Guzman, 188 S.W.3d at 190 n.9 (“proof of threatening another with imminent bodily injury by the use of a deadly weapon constitutes proof of engaging in conduct that places another in imminent danger of serious bodily injury,” for misdemeanor deadly conduct); Dixon, 358 S.W.3d at 256–57 (same). Misdemeanor deadly conduct is not a potential lesser included offense of the aggravated assault by threat charged here. See Thornton, 425 S.W.3d at 300 (“If the answer to either of these questions is no, the court of appeals is not authorized to reform the judgment.”).

As for simple assault by threat, we have already concluded that the evidence of a non-verbal threat is insufficient to support a conviction for a charge based on a verbal threat. Thus, we cannot reform the judgment to simple assault by threat.

We do not have the authority to reform the judgment of conviction here to any lesser included offense. We therefore must reverse the judgment of conviction and render a judgment of acquittal. See id. at 299–300; Lang, 586 S.W.3d at 136. Because of this disposition, we need not reach Brooks’s remaining issues. See Tex. R. App. P. 47.1.

CONCLUSION

We reverse the judgment of conviction and render a judgment of acquittal.

JURY INSTRUCTIONS

Members of the jury,

The defendant, Jessie Lee Brooks, Jr., is accused of Aggravated Assault with a Deadly Weapon. The defendant has pleaded "not guilty," and you have heard all of the evidence that will be produced on whether the defendant has been proved guilty.

Both sides will soon present final arguments. Before they do so, I must now give you the instructions you must follow in deciding whether the defendant has been proved guilty or not.

You will have a written copy of these instructions to take with you and to use during your deliberations.

First I will tell you about some general principles of law that must govern your decision of the case. Then I will tell you about the specific law applicable to this case. Finally, I will instruct you on the rules that must control your deliberations.

GENERAL PRINCIPLES

The Indictment

The indictment is not evidence of guilt. The indictment is only a document required to bring the case before you. The indictment cannot be considered in any way by the jury. Do not consider that fact that the defendant has been arrested, confined, or indicted. You may not draw any inference of guilt from any of these circumstances.

Presumption of Innocence

The defendant is presumed innocent of the charge. All persons are presumed to be innocent, and no person may be convicted of an offense unless each element of the offense is proved beyond a reasonable doubt. The law does not require a defendant to prove his innocence or produce any evidence at all. Unless the jurors are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt of the defendant's guilt after careful and impartial consideration of all the evidence in the case, that presumption of innocence alone is sufficient to acquit the defendant.

Burden of Proof

IMAGED

The burden of proof throughout the trial is always on the state. The defendant does not have the burden to prove anything. The state must prove every element of the offense beyond a reasonable doubt to establish guilt for the offense. If the state proves every element of the offense beyond a reasonable doubt, then you must find the defendant guilty. If the state does not prove every element of the offense beyond a reasonable doubt, then you must find the defendant not guilty. If, after you have considered all the evidence and these instructions, you have a reasonable doubt about whether the defendant is guilty, you must find the defendant not guilty.

It is not required that the state prove guilt beyond all possible doubt; it is required that the state's proof excludes all 'reasonable doubt' concerning the defendant's guilt.

Jury as Fact Finder

As the jurors, you review the evidence and determine the facts and what they prove. You judge the believability of the witnesses and what weight to give their testimony.

In judging the facts and believability of the witnesses, you must apply the law provided in these instructions.

Evidence

The evidence consists of the testimony and exhibits admitted in the trial. You must consider only evidence to reach your decision. You must not consider, discuss, or mention anything that is not evidence in the trial. You must not consider or mention any personal knowledge or information you may have about any fact or person connected with this case that is not evidence in the trial.

Statements made by the lawyers are not evidence. The questions asked by the attorneys are not evidence. Evidence consists of the testimony of the witnesses and materials admitted into evidence.

Nothing the judge has said or done in this case should be considered by you as an opinion about the facts of this case or influence you to vote one way or the other.

You should give terms their common meanings, unless you have been told in these instructions that the terms are given special meanings. In that case, of course, you should give those terms the meanings provided in these instructions.

While you should consider only evidence, you are permitted to draw reasonable inferences from the testimony and exhibits that are justified in the light of common experience. In other words, you may make deductions and reach conclusions that reason and common sense lead you to draw from the facts that have been established by the evidence.

You are to render a fair and impartial verdict based on the evidence admitted in the case under the law that is in these instructions. Do not allow your verdict to be determined by bias or prejudice.

Admitted Exhibits

You may, if you wish, examine exhibits. If you wish to examine an exhibit, the foreperson will inform the court and specifically identify the exhibit you wish to examine. Only exhibits that were admitted into evidence may be given to you for examination.

Right Not To Testify

Our law provides that a defendant may testify on his own behalf if he elects to do so. This, however, is a privilege accorded to the defendant, and in the event he elects not to testify, that fact cannot be taken as a circumstance against him. In this case, the defendant has elected not to testify, and you are instructed that you cannot and must not refer or allude to that fact throughout your deliberations or take it into consideration for any purpose whatsoever as a circumstance against the defendant.

The Verdict

The law requires that you render a verdict of either "guilty" or "not guilty." The verdict of "not guilty" simply means that the state's evidence does not prove the defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt.

You may return a verdict only if all twelve of you agree on this verdict.

When you reach a verdict, the foreperson should notify the court.

RULES THAT CONTROL DELIBERATIONS

You must follow these rules while you are deliberating and until you reach a verdict. After the closing arguments by the attorneys, you will go into the jury room.

Your first task will be to pick your foreperson. The foreperson should conduct the deliberations in an orderly way. Each juror has one vote, including the foreperson. The foreperson must supervise the voting, vote with other members on the verdict, and sign the verdict sheet.

While deliberating and until excused by the trial court, all jurors must follow these rules:

1. You must not discuss this case with any court officer, or the attorneys, or anyone not on the jury.
2. You must not discuss this case unless all of you are present in the jury room. If anyone leaves the room, then you must stop your discussions about the case until all of you are present again.
3. You must communicate with the judge only in writing, signed by the foreperson and given to the judge through the officer assigned to you.
4. You must not conduct any independent investigations, research, or experiments.
5. You must tell the judge if anyone attempts to contact you about the case before you reach your verdict.

Your sole duty at this point is to determine whether the defendant has been proved guilty. You must restrict your deliberations to this matter.

After you have arrived at your verdict, you are to use one of the forms attached to these instructions. You should have your foreperson sign his or her name to the particular form that conforms to your verdict.

After the closing arguments by the attorneys, you will begin your deliberations to decide your verdict.

AGGRAVATED ASSAULT WITH A DEADLY WEAPON

Accusation

The state accuses the defendant of having committed the offense of aggravated assault. Specifically, the accusation is that the defendant intentionally or knowingly threatened imminent bodily injury to Lisa Grayson and that the defendant did use or exhibit a deadly weapon during the commission of the assault, to wit: a piece of wood.

Relevant Statutes

A person commits an offense if the person intentionally or knowingly threatens imminent bodily injury to another and uses or exhibits a deadly weapon during the commission of the assault.

To prove that the defendant is guilty of aggravated assault, the state must prove three elements. The elements are that –

1. the defendant threatened imminent bodily injury to another; and
2. the defendant did this intentionally or knowingly; and
3. the defendant used or exhibited a deadly weapon during the alleged assault.

Definitions

Bodily Injury

“Bodily injury” means physical pain, illness, or any impairment of physical condition.

Intentionally Threaten Another with Imminent Bodily Injury

A person intentionally threatens another with imminent bodily injury if it is the person’s conscious objective or desire to cause the other person to fear imminent bodily injury.

Knowingly Threaten Another with Imminent Bodily Injury

A person knowingly threatens another with imminent bodily injury if the person is aware that the person’s conduct is reasonably certain to cause the other person to fear imminent bodily injury.

Deadly Weapon

"Deadly weapon" means anything that in the manner of its use or intended use is capable of causing death or serious bodily injury.

Serious Bodily Injury

"Serious bodily injury" means bodily injury that creates a substantial risk of death or that causes death, serious permanent disfigurement, or protracted loss or impairment of that function of any bodily member.

Application of Law to Facts

To find the defendant guilty of aggravated assault with a deadly weapon, you must determine whether the state has proved, beyond a reasonable doubt, three elements. The elements are that –

1. the defendant, in Milam County, Texas, on or about August 15, 2017, threatened imminent bodily injury to Lisa Grayson;
2. the defendant did this –
  - a. intentionally; or
  - b. knowingly; and
3. the defendant, during the alleged assault, used or exhibited a deadly weapon, to wit: a piece of wood.
